

PHYSICAL REALITY

Jeffrey Marks
Copyright 2007

This is a veil. It is all a veil. All I'm seeing is what my eyes have been attuned to see. But right now, I can see the Matrix beyond all that. The flesh is only a thinly lined fabric upon the energy web of spirit and soul. The two are deeply connected and entwined, yet this veil, though we think and feel is permanent and sustenance, is not. It is a mock-up, a false reality for which we make and believe constitutes the real reality. It is a phony set, like actors use in movies. It has value, only in the sense of it providing the environment for which to play a scene, and act out. It does have meaning and purpose, but we give it more meaning and purpose than what it really has. It is fluid. It is thin. We think of it as thick and solid. It is not. Water, when you hit it just right, can feel as solid as a wall, yet we know you can drown in it.

This reality, the physical, is about as thick as playing cards. Yes, you can make a house out of playing cards, but it's not as firm and sustainable as it may appear. I know another part of my mind and eyes have been opened this day.

This reality is elastic. It's like that film that collects on the surface of soup. We know the soup behind it is the real substance, not the film. That is what we have done with physical reality -- it's only the skin on the soup and not the soup itself. You can puncture the skin, and the soup comes roaring out, saying "Here I am! This is the real me -- and I'm grand! I'm what you want to eat!" It's the same with life! It's the film on the soup!!! And we incarnate in this film, not to be separated from the soup, because the soup is right there with us, but to interact and create, experience, and enjoy in a form of expression that is separate from the "divine" reality. It's like you have channels, television channels. You have sci-fi-, you have comedy, you have drama. How would you like to experience yourself and your life? How would you like to grow, learn, and become? There are many different avenues, and each provides a different framework, or television channel with a certain style, on how to experience and create your life, and reflect back to you yourself. This physical reality is one of the channels! And it's only one. There are others! It's a channel line up dealing with the modes of experiencing. How would you like to experience today? Channel 1 is non-corporeal. Let's experience my life in a non-corporeal way. Channel 2 could be something entirely different, like backwards polarity experience, and channel 4, or maybe even 11, is this physical reality. It's just one of several different ways to experience your life and reality.

Physical reality is only a tool. The physical is a tool in the toolbox of experiencing the multidimensional life of the soul. It's only one tool in a box of many. We need to realize that.

www.SpiritualExploration.com